

OKAY

She's just a young woman, in her junior year in high school. She's just growing into her skin, slowly becoming comfortable and learning who she is. She is always at her best friend London's side; though he's older by one year, he takes her under his wing. There's just one thing that sets her apart from the rest- . Her Father is an alcoholic. She is able to cope with this for...

Reader's Opinions

This is a book about identity, a girl who seems to rebel against being defined by the things that happen to her rather than who she really is-which, she sets out to find out. I suppose this is what is meant by the term coming-of-age in the truest sense, by defining oneself for oneself. Although the character does not...
